Controller Chris Hollins Unveils Portrait Gallery of Former Houston City Controllers in City Hall Several History Making Houstonians Participate in Opening Ceremony

HOUSTON — The history of the City of Houston came to life on Wednesday, April 16th at City Hall when City Controller Chris Hollins welcomed several of his predecessors to celebrate their service as City Controllers at the formal unveiling of their new portrait gallery.

“The individuals featured in this photo gallery played a pivotal role in shaping our city’s financial landscape, and I am pleased to join with them, in person and in spirit, to recognize their service and dedication to the people of Houston,” said Controller Hollins. “Each Controller brought a unique vision and style of leadership to this office, working to build trust in our community by holding government accountable to serve Houstonians.”

Congresswoman Sylvia Garcia (D-TX-29), who served as City Controller from 1998 to 2003, joined Hollins for the ceremony. Said Congresswoman Garcia, "Serving as City Controller was one of the most demanding roles I've ever held—not only was I the Chief Financial Officer for the fourth-largest city in the nation, but also the financial watchdog for the people of Houston. Balancing both responsibilities was no small task, but it gave me the skills and perspective to take on just about anything I've faced since."

Also joining Hollins was former Houston Mayor Annise Parker, who served two terms as City Controller from 2004 to 2010 and later three terms as Mayor from 2010 to 2016. Parker noted, "I learned that good governance starts with knowing where every dollar goes. As City Controller, I saw firsthand the challenges and opportunities within our finances—and as Mayor, that knowledge helped me lead with both accountability and vision."

Other former City Controllers in attendance included Ronald Green, the first Black Houstonian to serve as Controller, and Chris Brown, the immediate past Controller.

Controller Hollins noted that the dedicated work of his predecessors laid a strong foundation for a prosperous Houston. He called on Houstonians to appreciate their past service, which helped lay the groundwork for a bright and financially sound future for our city.

Here is a brief overview of Hollins's predecessors since 1945, and a statement about the accomplishments of each:

- Roy B. Oakes (1945-1972) laid the groundwork for modern financial oversight, acting as a vigilant watchdog over city funds.
- Leonel Castillo (1972-1977) was the first Mexican-American Controller, expanding the office's influence and advocating for civil rights alongside financial issues.
- Kathryn J. Whitmire (1978-1982) became the first woman to serve as Controller, balancing fiscal responsibility with political engagement. She later became the first woman to serve as Mayor of Houston.
- Lance Lalor (1982-1988) intensified the Controller's role in budgetary discussions, advocating against excessive spending.
- George Greanias (1988-1996) faced historic conflicts with Mayor Bob Lanier, establishing the importance of independent oversight of financial matters.
- Lloyd E. Kelley (1996-1998) took the office in a new direction, promoting collaboration with the Mayor while navigating controversy.
- Sylvia R. Garcia (1998-2002) continued the tradition of independence, implementing significant improvements in efficiency and transparency.
- Judy Gray Johnson (2003) streamlined operations, ensuring fiscal prudence and earning an esteemed 'AAAF' rating for the City's debt.
- Annise D. Parker (2004-2010) helped secure crucial voter-approved reforms, exemplifying strong leadership and later serving as Mayor.
- Ronald C. Green (2010-2016) achieved significant savings through refinancing and prudently managed the city's vast debt portfolio.
- Chris B. Brown (2016-2024) focused on both efficiency and effective governance, partnering with Mayor Sylvester Turner to achieve historic pension reform.
